Today's Mass

A favourite text, often displayed in the homes of fundamental christians, is from the words of Joshua to the Tribes of Israel at Shechem: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

Joshua's words are confident and inspirational. They affirm identity in the lord, but recognise that conditions are attached. The God of the patriarchs has been faithful in delivering his promises, and guiding his people in safety to a new land, but commitment and service will be expected in return. It is in this context of mutual obligations that the covenant and its promises must be understood. Blessings will come as a reward for faithfulness. This hope will sustain and encourage Joshua's people in their efforts to serve god in their new surroundings.

Joshua goes on to put a choice before the leaders of the tribes. They, also, can recommit to the God of Israel and the terms of the covenant, or they can opt out and go their own way at this stage. In the Gospel, Jesus is similarly clear that even his closest disciples must actively choose whether they want to commit - or move away as others have done. In our own Catholic culture, where Christian faith and identity have been largely inherited and are, perhaps, fitfully adhered to in many ways, it might be worthwhile for us to pause and contemplate that basic choice which Joshua and Jesus both considered vital. In order to be meaningful and life-giving, it would seem, faith requires an on-going commitment. If it is to be genuine, that commitment must be freely given by those capable of such a mature choice. It might be time we each faced up to that choice for ourselves.

PARISH HUMOUR

Some things to think over:

Why are a wise man and a wise guy opposites?

If a pig loses its voice, is it disgruntled?

Why do overlook and oversee mean opposite things?

Why isn't the number 11 pronounced onety one?

When cheese has its picture taken, what does it say?

If 4 out of 5 people suffer from diarrhoea, dies that mean that the other one enjoys it?

Why if you send something by road is it called a SHIPment, but when you send it by sea it is called CARgo?

If a convenience store is open 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year, why are there locks on the door?

Why is the man who invests all your money called a broker?
